Dear Tony:

I much enjoyed the family photo of the Debevcs in the current issue of Wine East. Hudson really should have reproduced it the full three columns wide.

It reminded me of the time, so long ago, when you kept dashing up from your training place down south of us. Talk about entrepreneurs!

This year we stopped propagating vines after fifty years of, though we continue to bring in equipment from Friederich and others (but not maintaining a real inventory). After all, we accomplished what we started out to do, namely to introduce and establish a whole new range of plant material, and had a good time doing it. As you doubtless saw elsewhere in the magazine, that human partnership is now ended. L

Give my regards to your wine-growing family,

J. Philip Wagner
