National Wine Competition
San Francisco

1993 Awards
1993 was an exciting year for the San Francisco Fair National Wine Competition, as the judging maintained trends from previous years while offering a number of shocking new surprises. For the third year in a row, a zinfandel garnered the sweepstakes award for best of show red wine, with Green & Red Vineyards taking the honors. An Ohio riesling produced by Chalet Debonné Vineyards was given the sweepstakes prize for white wines, the second consecutive year an out-of-state white wine has earned best of show.

Another constancy has been the superb quality of the judging. The 40 judges consisted of top wine industry professionals from across the country, with two Masters of Wine and five Master Sommeliers among them. The judges tasted nearly 2,000 wines over two days at the luxurious Park Hyatt Hotel in downtown San Francisco. The tasting format is blind for both the preliminary and medal rounds, absolutely ensuring the competition results are unbiased and equitable.

A double gold medal is awarded when the four or five person judging panel votes unanimously for a gold medal. In all, 596 medals were awarded, with 23 double gold, 47 gold, 168 silver, and 358 bronze. The panel was particular in adjudicating double gold and gold. Just over one percent of the wines received a double gold, and only 2.5% were awarded gold medals.
The Bon Appétit Andre Tchelistcheff Award, given to the winery earning the most medals on a cumulative point basis, was awarded to Windsor Vineyards from Healdsburg. The winery won 13 medals consisting of 1 double gold, 1 gold, 4 silver, and 7 bronze.

The shocker of this year’s competition undoubtedly was the double gold medal awarded to Meier’s Wine Cellars from Ohio for their non-vintage white catawba. This wine retails for just over $3.00 and features a screw top closure. The award is a testament to the unbiased quality of the judging, as well as the truly national character of the competition. 430 wineries representing 23 states were entered in 1993. Although California had the largest contingent, there were strong showings for wines from Washington, Oregon, Virginia, New York, Texas, New Mexico, and others.

We again were very pleased with the dedication of our volunteers, the talent of our judges, and the enthusiasm of everyone involved. We are also appreciative of the support we have received from our excellent Board of Directors. We look forward with great anticipation to our 1994 competition.

A Grape of Many Faces

by Anthony Dias Blue

It is, some botanists tell us, the oldest wine grape of all. This variety is known by many different names but let’s call it by its family name for now - Muscat.

This prolific variety is the grape that the Phoenicians, Greeks and Romans planted around the rim of the Mediterranean. It was the first grape of southern France and the earliest recorded in Alsace.

There are several different Muscat varieties planted throughout the world, but the best of them is the MUSCAT BLANC A PETITS GRAINS which has more than thirty aliases. In Russia it is called Tamyanka, it is Moscatel Dorado in Spain, and Weisse Muskettraube in Germany. In California this variety is known as White Muscat, Muscat Frontignan, Muscat Blanc and, most frequently, Muscat Canelli.

Other Muscats grown in California include Muscat of Alexandria, Muscat Ottonel and Muscat Hamburg, also known as Black Muscat. Muscat of Alexandria is the world’s most widely planted Muscat. It is frequently used as a table grape, as a raisin grape and it makes decent but ordinary wines. Black Muscat is made into a rich, dark port-like wine.

In northern Italy, Muscat is made into sparkling wine - the very popular Asti Spumante. In the Rhone region of France it is made into a fruity and luscious dessert wine called Beaumes-de-Venise, and in Australia it is made into Liqueur Muscat, a thick and intense dessert wine similar to Port.

It’s Time For Pinot Noir
by Anthony Dias Blue

Pinot Noir has the potential for making the greatest wines in the world. At their best, they are wines of soft, sensuous texture and seductive flavor - much more immediately appealing than Cabernet Sauvignon. Certainly Cabernet is more reliable and has probably produced more fine wines than Pinot, and the downside risks with Cabernet aren’t as great. A mediocre Cabernet is likely to be drinkable, a mediocre Pinot Noir can easily approximate brake fluid.

When I started getting interested in California wines I found, much to my delight, that California Chardonnays and Cabernet Sauvignons were just as charming and maybe even a bit more consistent than their Gallic counterparts. But the Pinot Noirs were a real bring down.

Pinot is an extremely temperamental variety. If it doesn’t like where it is planted it pouts or, even worse, it refuses to develop properly. Pinot Noir has bombed in soils that are too rich, it has flopped resoundingly in overwarm climates and, to compound these problems, it has usually been vinified all wrong. The results have been thick, coarse wines; tart, bitter, stemmy wines; and harsh, vegetal wines. Pinot Noir, it appeared, would never produce good wines in America.
But winemakers eventually discovered that Pinot Noir vines need to be punished a little in order to make good wine. The grapes seem to be most successful when planted in thin, lean soil and subjected to a relatively cool growing season.

Winerys discovered the foggy microclimates in the valleys of Sonoma, in Carneros, in the Edna Valley, in the wilds of San Benito and in the Santa Maria area and suddenly California began to make consistently good Pinot Noirs.

It happened gradually, but it happened. First success was sporadic, then it became more frequent. Now there are wineries that seem to be able to turn out good Pinot Noirs almost at will. Not only are there excellent examples of the variety available from California vineyards, but more and more consumers are beginning to discover these soft, fruity and eminently drinkable wines.

They are representatives of the largest selling wine category. They are "blush" wines - those pale pink and coral colored wines that are never taken seriously, except by the people who have made a great deal of money selling them.

"Blush" is the name for this group of blanc de noirs - white wines made from red grapes. The name "blush" was coined and is owned by Mill Creek Vineyards in Sonoma, but it has come to characterize this whole category. Essentially, these are frivolous wines - "fun" wines that wine experts sneer at and consumers adore.

The idea, which probably derived from French "vin gris," is to take red grapes and make white wine from them. For the past decade or so white wines have grown steadily to dominate the general wine market, so a large amount of quality red grapes are going begging - unwanted because red wines are out of style.

Some savvy vintners discovered that a charming, off-dry, almost-white wine could be made from these grapes. You see, the pigment that tints the wine red is contained in the skins of red grapes. Red wines are made by letting the juice ferment in contact with the skins of the grapes. The violent action of the fermentation process leeches the pigment from the skins and colors the wine. If, however, the grapes are crushed and the skins are removed from the process immediately, the resultant juice should be clear white. In reality, the skins do get bruised and some color gets into the juice. The real result is a white wine that has a pinkish tinge.

The grape variety that seems to lend itself best to this process is zinfandel. Actually, there are others that do just as well - cabernet sauvignon, pinot noir - but these varieties have other uses. Cabernet is the only red variety that still has a substantial following, and pinot noir - a red variety that is growing in popularity - is in great demand for the production of sparkling wines. Although there are some fine blanc de noirs wines made from cabernet, pinot noir, gamay and other reds, the preponderant number of "blush" wines are still zinfandel.

Grappa - The Unlikely Spirit

by Anthony Dias Blue

The first time I tasted grappa was in Turin almost twenty years ago. I was visiting a Barolo producer and, at the end of a particularly long and rich meal, he got up from the dinner table and left the room without a word. He returned a few minutes later, with a strange bottle in his hands.

"This is what we need right now," he chuckled and poured us both a large snifter of clear white liquid. I took a deep sniff and recoiled as the strong fumes seared my nose. "Go ahead," the vintner urged. "Take a sip." I did and was jolted by a burst of flame on my tongue and down the back of my throat. "This is the traditional way that northern Italian peasants end a big dinner." I could feel the stuff cutting through my fullness like Liquid Plumber.

The vintner explain that I had just tasted an unaged brandy called "grappa" that was made from the residue left after winemaking. It was certainly an unattractive concept, at best. I sipped again and thought about what I had just tasted. After the fire, the second impression was of wet hay and earth with a touch of anise. "This is one product," I thought as I choked down my second and last taste, "that will never make it in the U.S. market." So much for my career as a pundit. Today, as we move through the 1990s, grappa has become "hot." Unbelievable as this may be, collections of grappa now grace the bars of some of America’s best restaurants and American connoisseurs are actually drinking grappa, and liking it.

What is grappa? Technically, it is a pomace brandy, but that doesn’t really explain very much. When grapes are pressed in the beginning stages of the winemaking process, the juice is put into a fermenting tank where it continues the dramatic progression of transformation from grape juice to wine. Left behind, after the pressing, is a dense mass of grape skins, pulp and seeds plus stems and leaves. This residue is called "pomace" or, in Italian, vinaccie.

Since the grapes are not pressed so hard that all the juice is extracted, the remains still contain liquid. This pomace can be fermented and then distilled.

The grappa that I tasted seventeen years ago was a raw, unsophisticated spirit that was typical of the brandies made in home stills by grape farmers for centuries. This harsh distillate was directly descended from the medicines and digestive tonics of the middle ages. Grappa was a rough, completely unrefined country brandy, almost like moonshine. It was only as recently as 1933 that it was decreed that this traditional spirit must be bottled, instead of sold directly from the barrel.

Today’s grappa can be very different. Yes, there still is plenty of fiery grappa around that tastes like a fermented compost heap, but the real action is with carefully made, premium grappas. This whole new type of grappa is what has captured the interest of connoisseurs.

The modern grappa is carefully made from the moment the grapes are first crushed. The pomace is only lightly pressed, kept fresh and quickly distilled - preferably within six hours - to minimize oxidation and to preserve fresh perfumes and flavors.
