Weekend College offers Alternative for part-time students

By Laura Hissong

This fall, 294 students are studying instead of relaxing on weekends because they are part of a new program at KSUSC, Weekend College, which offers college credit courses on Saturdays and Sundays.

Among the courses being offered are the basics such as Freshman English I to the more specialized courses like Organized Crime and Vice Control. The Weekend College will give students a wider choice of times for scheduling classes.

A survey by the Department of Academic Affairs of 209 weekend students showed that 100 are in the age range of 22 to 30 years old, with 20 percent of the students having no prior college credits. Close to two-thirds of the students learned about the Weekend College from a printed brochure that was distributed. Out of the 209 students surveyed there are 112 students enrolled in day and evening classes in addition to the weekends.

Weekend College was originally conceived by the faculty council at Stark campus, later meeting approval and being implemented by the administration at the Kent campus.

Richard C. Schlup of Academic Affairs planned the scheduling of classes from a list of possible courses compiled by the various departments. Teachers for the weekend courses were obtained from volunteers from the Kent Stark faculty.

Sherlock Holmes takes spotlight at Stark theater

By Karen Krick

"Sherlock Holmes", William Gillette's revised edition of Arthur Conan Doyle's play, is not merely a mystery, but a pleasing mixture of drama, comedy and romance.

The play is being presented on Nov. 17-19 and 24-25 at the Kent Stark theater.

Sherlock Holmes fans will be surprised to learn that he has his first romantic interest and he encounters his arch enemy, Professor Moriarity.

The play is directed by Phillip Robb, professor of speech. Robb said he chose the play because this type of play has never been done here and it would be a challenge to all involved.

Playing in the major roles will be George Calender as Sherlock Holmes, Dale Jacobs as Dr. Watson, Jef Harris as Professor Moriarity and Chris Gradl as Alice Faulkner.

Tickets may be reserved by contacting Eileen Harold in the Fine Arts Building at 499-9604, ext. 494.
Stark Campus hits the air waves with WKSC

By Jane Paul

KSUSC has brought "music and more" to its students and staff through the formation of its first radio station, WKSC. Broadcasts are heard on a closed circuit, pre-taped basis in the student lounge and various offices in the SSA Building. Hook-up to the other buildings on campus is the future hope of the staff.

The purpose of the station is to provide telecommunications and journalism majors practical experience in radio delivery of campus news and announcements. It is also extracurricular activity for all interested students.

Broadcasts are between 10:30 a.m. and 12:00 noon weekdays. Programming consists of pop rock, school announcements, and charity and cultural promotions.

The station began its broadcasts in mid July after many years of contemplation and planning by Dr. Ed Swingle, speech professor and advisor to the Radio Club.

WKSC is located in the Communications office in the SSA Building. Marlene Padovan, communications director of Kent State, is the radio station advisor.

Andy Sanderbeck is this year's student station manager. Sanderbeck does much of the broadcasting as well as running the equipment and handling the paperwork. The station still needs staff members. Anyone interested can stop by the Communications Office in the SSA Building and be interviewed for a position.

A society that's designed
With the budding poet in mind

The Canton Poetry Society has been representing this area in the literary arts for 42 years. Meetings are held at Malone College, Timken Science Building at 7:30 p.m. on the first Friday of each month.

Membership in Canton Poetry Society is open to all interested persons, and requires that a few poems be submitted to the forum held at each meeting. Prospective members are voted upon by the regular membership. Dues are $5.00 annually. Prospective members and visitors are welcome at monthly meetings. The Society membership is currently about 25.

Dr. Alvin Metcalfe, English professor at KSUSC will be the guest speaker at the May meeting. Dr. Metcalfe will lecture on prosody, the study of metrical pattern and rhythms of English poetry.

The Society's aim is to promote interest in, and an appreciation of, poetry in the Canton area, according to Ms. Margaret Eaves, president of the society. Ms. Eaves, who is extensively published, states that the organization has encouraged junior and senior high school students to write poetry through its various contests. Prizes are made possible through endowment and the Ohio Arts Council, which is headquartered in Columbus.

Student Election Winners

Only 19 students ran for the 20 openings in the Student Government Senate elections on Oct. 3-4, and all are winners. Elections were held in the lower level of the SSA Building.

The following students are this years representatives of the student body:

Chris Adamczyk
Rick Anchor
Mark Brockway
Stephanie Buckles

George Buckles
Freddy Conway
Mark Cooper
Ruth Dine
Sue Espenschied
Cathy Falvo
Nancy Keggy
Marilyn Martin
Renee R. Rodak
Andrew Sanderbeck
Bob Sick
Ramona Snook
Claudia Staib
Raymond Strain
Dale Wills

These students were eligible to run after obtaining 50 signatures on their petitions.

The senate's main purpose is to serve as a representative of the student body. Student Government is located in room 118 in the SSA Building.
Religious counseling available to students

By Mary Ann Kannam

In 11 years, the Interfaith Campus Ministry has grown into a service that is utilized by 300 to 400 students a week.

"We're not trying to shove religion down anyone's throat, but to make a statement of what religion can mean in everyday life," the Rev. Thomas Douce, co-director of the Interfaith program said. "People are constantly turning to us and they see Interfaith as a place they can get help."

Students are referred to the Interfaith program from the Student Services office. Students may also be referred to other sources such as clergy or community organizations.

Students usually become aware of Interfaith programs by "word of mouth," according to Douce and Interfaith Co-director Sister Rita Petruzielio.

There is a cross section of students and faculty who form "informal support groups in the lounge of Interfaith and the complexion of these groups changes from quarter to quarter and year to year," Douce, an ordained United Methodist minister, said.

Douce and Sister Rita encourage all students to utilize Interfaith facilities in room 220-SSA on a regular basis, not only when they are faced with a major problem.

Interfaith services include personal counseling, the Campus Child Care Center for children of students and faculty and religious counseling. A group that would deal with religious topics as a support or growth group is in the planning stages.

Funds are solicited from local congregations and the Interfaith organization is primarily supported by the community.

"Interfaith acts as a resource group," Douce said. "We are very closely tied into the local community and Interfaith is not an independent super-program, but a bridge between the church, civic community and university."

There's a place for junior at Stark

By Chairmaine Prince

The Campus Child Care Center provides day care service for the children of students and faculty of KSUSC and Stark Technical College. The center is located in the John Knox Presbyterian Church directly across from Stark Tech and is open Monday through Friday from 7:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Child care is provided for children ages 2 1/2 to 5. Anyone interested should call Mrs. Donna Crile, director, at 499-0909.

Mrs. Crile says the children in the center are encouraged to develop positive self-images and to explore the world around them. One of the many activities planned for this fall is a visit to the Fine Arts Building to see the Mastodon.

The center began in January 1977 and is sponsored by the Interfaith Campus Ministry, in cooperation with Stark Campus and the John Knox Presbyterian Church.

QUESTION: Is the Campus RTA bus available to all students?

The Regional Transit Authority (RTA) bus route 30A is available to all KSUSC students. The buses leave in front of the Ohio Theater on the corner of Fourth and Market streets in downtown Canton.

The cost for a bus pass is $12 per month and can be picked up along with schedules at the Student Affairs Office.

The first bus leaves the Ohio Theater at 7:25 a.m. and arrives at the Stark Campus at 7:55 a.m. The last bus leaves Stark at 5:55 p.m.

The bus also stops in front of O'Neil's in the Belden Village Mall. For further time schedules students may contact the Canton RTA office at 454-6132.
Cobra women handed 1st loss

The Kent Stark women's volleyball team saw their four game winning streak come to end with losses to Malone College and Oberlin College.

Head Coach Kathi Walz is optimistic about this year's squad which features five returnees from last year's team. Walz is extremely pleased with the players' teamwork and well balanced attack.

Walz' coaching style differs from many coaches in that she does not dwell on the negative she says that "positiveness makes the team work harder. If I were to yell it would probably come out in German."

Walz considers teamwork the key to success. "The girls are enthusiastic, in better physical condition, are mentally alert and make a team effort," she said. Much importance is placed on physical conditioning which began three weeks prior to the season opener. Walz feels that the conditioning program along with the extra work the players do on their own has lead to the team having more stamina under strain.

Assistant Coach Gus Moujaes is a former member of the national volleyball team of Lebanon and Walz considers his experience a valuable asset to the team.

Captain Betty Aman is the playmaker of the team. Her power playing and spiking abilities have caused her coach to refer to her as "the backbone of the team."

Co-captain Fran Seifert and Patty Roberts, returnees from last season, were praised by Walz as being "excellent spikers and defensive players." Charlene Berkshire and Ramona Snook, also second year players, are the outstanding servers on the team. Berkshire is a very strong, powerful server while Snook is noted for her consistency.

According to Walz the four team newcomers are playing well and are making great contributions to the teams' success.
