Table of Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>Icon/Valerie Martiila</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Day Cycle/Nicholas Verina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Table of Contents</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Poem/Susan Bystry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Break from the Sea/John Thomas Hand</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Poem/Christine Dedon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Illustration/James Van Gilder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Illustration/Doreen Svensen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Cypress, Willow, and Serpent/Carl B. Yoke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Poem/Jerry Vandegrift</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Shah: in hesitant afterthought/Susan Bystry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Poem/Christine Dedon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Poem/Robert Alvarez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Modern Delusion/Valerie Stewart</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>A Question/Robert T. Pickett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Montage II/Jay Silverman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>North Wind/Nicholas Verina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Poem/Jo Ann Stiffler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Poem/John Mallozzi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Uncommon/Patrick Greene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Aligator Module Wood/Harry Izouer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Weeds in Straight Gardens/John Mallozzi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Poem/Jo Ann Stiffler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Montage I/Jay Silverman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>It's Raining in My Room/Tim Gnauc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>The Stranger/Jo Ann Stiffler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>Birthday Poem/Alex Gidzen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>Brown Body/Susan Bystry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Illustration/Nancy Gnat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>Junk Mail/Jay Silverman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31</td>
<td>Contributors</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
My option is to seize rainbows and tumble, abandoned,
into May while beckoning the platitudes of a June warmth.

_Susan Rystry_

BREAK FROM THE SEA

_John Thomas Hand_

The clean spread of your thighs
Rocks, a beat near landfall,
Where the ocean spends its cataract of power
And tosses shells, glass, timber enough
To build all the houses on this continent.
Break from the sea, let your body show
The sweetness of its acrid smell,
Wafted on these lines of dawn,
These waves of air that move
To hold our land, this fading west.

in sorrow
the and in sorrow
the and how often to when red but youth and what the impact shall i co in sorrow i conceive, at last,
    the enormity of war and the redness of blood.
in sorrow i conceive, at last,
    the sheerness of security and the sureness of death.

how often i wish that i could go back to younger days . . .
when red was merely the color of wine,
but youth spends itself on wisdom,
and what will the wisdom buy?
the impact of reality?
shall i conceive in sorrow, at last?

Christine Dedon
The slashing rays of the sun lying in the narrow channel from ebon-hearted cypress to the eternal scream. Protean sculpted with the setting sun black-barked caverns of the black waters. And Jungian visions of mind. All—in the shadow

—the wind is warm for magnolias heavy—oh! too him—God damn him!

—But why this fever? he drives me to this fever.

—Who is that harlequin?
Strange, strangely old, Weren't my mask? What strange
-me, -me, -me ...

—There's not enough time
chill touch now. And back Cold-dead snow. The poet's felt life ...

—Oh! I turn to stone ...
My god, what have I done chilled and turned to stone?
Answer me, Answer me! ...

—No answer?
—No answer. No answer.
—Strange, the wind chill
Are those my legs? Ha! I'm Phoenix! All is ashen now. Fire to ashes. Venus is nought but itself ...

—What! What is this state Plunging me into the well,
-eping, -eping, -eping, -eping,
CYPRESS, WILLOW, AND SERPENT

Carl B. Yoke

The slashing rays of the setting sun glaze the pools of dark water lying in the narrow channels between dying-brown lily pads. And from crow-hearted cypress woods, sun-crowned night begins her eternal scream. Protean shadows fall, changing and again changing with the setting sun; and shapeless things scurry through black-barked caverns of quarried root, that push down through black waters. And Jangian shapes scurry through Shadow-pools of mind. All—in the shadows of mind . . .

—the wind is warm tonight . . . warm, so very warm. And the magnolias heavy—oh! too sweet, too, too sweet! Damn him, damn him—God damn him!
—But why this fever? I shouldn’t care, I shouldn’t care! He—he drives me to this fever? It’s his fault . . .
—There’s not enough time. Soon winter will come. I—I feel his chill touch now. And back at home, snow will cover all. And cold. Cold dead snow. The poetess—she will die . . . die before she ever felt life . . .
—Oh! I turn to stone at the thought of his touch! Oh, God! My god, what have I done! You touched your torch to me, and I chilled and turned to stone. You let him; you let him! Why? Why? Answer me. Answer me! . . .
—No answer?
—No answer. No answer, -swer, -swer, -swer, -swer . . .
—Strange, the wind chills. It whips at my legs. Is that the wind? Are those my legs? Ha! ha! ha! And between them?—a marble phoenix! All is ash now. From dust to dust! Ha! ha! From ashes to ashes. Venus is nought but marble ash . . . her beauty consumed itself . . .
—What! What is this strange feeling that’s sweeping over me? Plunging me into the well, into the well, in to the well; weeping, -weeping, -weeping, -weeping, -weeping, -weeping . . .

continued
The willow branches languish in the warm wind. And whitecaps wash easily to the beach across the lake in the calm breath before the storm. Backeyes rain from chestnut trees as storm clouds weeping heavy tears. The sun is sinking quickly behind the serrated silhouette of chestnuts as if anxious to yield to night, and large hunch-backed patches of shadow play on the breast of the dark green water. Gilt-edged tree trunks support sunset, and fire-flowers of color burst on the inflamed dome of cloud, as love bursts in the hollow of man. And the willows bend gently with their weeping.

—I'm a man now. You and I are one. I don't regret a single second of it—of what we've done. I love you! Can't you understand that! You're mine now. I made you mine! It's not just a passing thing with me. I gave my whole soul to you. You own it. And I own you—in the same way. You must understand. You've got to. You've got to deal with what's real. And what happened is real . . .

—What's this letter? What does it mean. It doesn't make sense. It's not logical. Why would you send the letter now? It doesn't make sense. It just doesn't make sense! Why wouldn't you want to marry me? I can give you everything. Dad has money—we can live with him. He wouldn't mind. I know he wouldn't! And if you wanted, you could finish school.

—Ah, damn it, this is absurd! . . . Take that, you stupid rock! . . . There. That's it. Sink right down to the bottom. Right to the bottom . . .

—It wasn't wrong! I mean—I love you. I—I want to marry you. Don't you understand? And even if you feel it was wrong, it's done now. What's done is done. We can't change it. What we've got to do now is plan the future. I mean, what we did was only natural. And everyone is doing it. I mean, you know—morality isn't like it was twenty years ago. If you love someone, it's alright. And why would you do it if you didn't love me? You're not that kind of girl . . .

—It doesn't make any sense that you won't see me again. It's not logical after what's happened between us. You've got to love me! You've just got to.

From the silhouetted cypress flows a sluggish, shadow-stream, which mushrooms out infinitely in indefinite dark pools covered with dead-green water plants, then narrows into a deep, brooding channel which passes beneath a softly swaying suspension bridge. From the tangled jungle of plant stems swims a white-mouth water moccasin. It passes quickly and quietly in its infinite search for prey. As night steals on, its mask reflected from above the bridge, its red eyes blur darkening to an ebon shadow . . .

—What made me do it? Who am I that weak? The bridge?
—No! I can't! I can't! I can't . . .
—And yet, Sappho is dying. Her warped womb is wide open. It will burn black. Then it will burn red. There will be no more crying.
—Sappho!
—Get control of yourself. Don't mail to lament, fool. Stupid letters! It won't help. It can't help . . .

—That's better. Now start living. It would make him feel burdened with child—his own! Whose child would be his forever? For he was going to be a father. One mistake, only one . . .
—One dumb mistake! Only one! For I'm your record, Fatima. I'll leave your footprints . . .
—Hate you, Bobby! I know nothing would happen. And you me! I can't love you now. You wouldn't understand. You wouldn't understand—because you can't.
—Oh, how quickly the rain, I burn with the shame of red and warm. My wounded with shame, ache, and —What will they say?

The willow branches droop as the sun sets, and the waves depart endlessly. The moon rises. You are gone. They are gone. The lake, dimly lit by the stars, is all to shapelessness.
prey. As night steals on, it breaks water and shatters the harlequin mask reflected from above. Then, liquidly it glides in silence under the bridge, its red eyes burning with cold fire, its cotton mouth darkening to an ebony slit, its long, wet body gliding, gliding, gliding... .

—What made me do it? Why did I give in? What was I thinking of? Am I that weak? Then, maybe it's better if...
—No! I can't! I can't.
—And yet, Sappho is dying. Dying from a rape with a slide-rule. Her warped womb is woven with semen. It will swell and bleed. It will burn black. Then it will break open like burnt marshmallow. There will be no more creating. Sappho dies...
—Sappho!
—Get control of yourself! Get hold of yourself, I say. It's too late to lament, fool. Stupid little fool! Stop it! Stop it! Crying won't help. It can't help now...
—That's better. Now stop the sobbing. Look what he's done to you. It would make him happy if he knew. Yes, he would like you burdened with child—his child. It would make you his forever. I would be his forever? Forever, -ever, -ever, -ever...
—The pact is sealed. Midnight will strike. Faust can never win.
—One mistake, only one mistake. And this has to happen to me. One dumb mistake! Only one time, -ime, -ime, -ime...
—I'm your record, Father. On my body, and yes, my soul, you leave your footprints...
—I hate you, Bobby! I hate you! You did this to me. You said nothing would happen. And it did! You betrayed me! You betrayed me! I can't love you now. I can't. But you wouldn't understand. You wouldn't understand! I know you wouldn't. And because you wouldn't—because you can't, I can't love you.
—Oh, how quickly the passion passed. How soon it was over. I burn with the shame of it! I'm fired with shame! My cheeks are red and warm. My womb is seared! My memory flames! I'm covered with shame, -ame, -ame, -ame. I hate you! I hate you, Bobby!
—What will they say? -ay, -ay, -ay... betray!

The willow branches dance to storm winds as they watch cloud-chariots scurry to cover the sky. They ball up; then snap open with a whiplash. The lake purples, except for a fleeting slash of sun, and the waves churn to froth against the beach. A piece of driftwood slams endlessly into a rotting dock. On-rushing night mooras departing day with funereal moans, and where the last rays touch the darkly towering chestnuts on the south shore of the lake, dim lanterns seem to glow. Then the rain falls and dims all to shapelessness.

continued
—Must get inside. I’m soaked. There, close the cabin door. Roy, it’s really coming down . . . really coming down. It will snow soon, School will start soon, and when she gets back—then, she’ll understand. I’ll make her understand, I mean—there’s no reason why she shouldn’t. She must love me, She has to—she gave herself freely . . .

—But, I’m getting worked up for nothing. Of course, she loves me. And when she gets back, everything will be alright. I can give her everything. She’s just confused . . . bothered by the old Puritan code. She feels guilty, but she shouldn’t. I’ll make her understand. Love is giving yourself. And that’s what she did. She’s got to understand that sex isn’t good or bad—it just is. It’s a reality, a fact.

—We had great fun here this summer. She never did learn to swim, but next year I’ll teach her. Next summer—next summer will be great, just great!

—He wouldn’t understand! He couldn’t understand! I made a mistake—I just made a mistake. Stupid, stupid, little fool! He’s just like the rest—with their dim eyes, with their worlds that measure four by four, with their heads always in the mud . . .

—And I hate him! I hate him!
—Do you hear me, Bobby? I hate you!
—But what can I do? What can I do! There’s no answer . . . time betrays me. Seven more months!
—I hate you, Bobby! Bobby Time, Bobby Time, Bobby Time, -ime, -ime, -ime . . .
— I’m swelling. Look at that stomach! See it grow! Look at it! I see it growing now! It’s growing now, right now. A huge, ugly wart, art, art, art . . .
—Dies, Art dies.
—I don’t want his child! I hate it I hate it!
— I’ll beat this thing out of me! I’ll kill it! The little worm that breathes inside me—I’ll kill it! Take that! Ohhhh! And that! Ohhhh! I’ll smash this thing! Ohhhh! I’ll kill it!
—Kill it—ohhh—kill it—ohhh—kill it! Bastard! Bastard! Bastard! Bobby! Bobby Bastard, art dies, time, betray, Bobby Time . . . only one way. Have to Tangled roots reach out to accept the tanned body is it sinks beneath the black water. The last rays of sun disappear behind the cypress, and the somber, womb-mouth moccasin glides easily into night, while shapeless things scurry in the mind . . .

ONE SUMMER NIGHT

Jerry Vandegrift

Heaven was a dream I thought,
That night I sought what young men bought
With tender sighs and silken words
As shepherd moon watched o'er celestial herds
Of stars that walked on velvet skies
That shone no brighter than her eyes

One summer night.

A sweet warm scent embraced the air
That wafted gently from her hair
And stirred me to vows I needn't make
For, she, too, saw that time would forsake

One summer night.

Our own small eden that night did bring,
A pillow land where Caress reigned king.
Little I cared if saints did frown
That night her silken hair came down;
Little I cared if morning sun
Would bear witness to innocence I'd undone

One summer night.

She laughed at sunset. She smiled at dawn.
She kissed me at daybreak, then she was gone.
And I looked toward what fate would bring
As I sang the songs that all men sing

On summer days.
SHAH: in hesitant afterthought...

Susan Bystry

There was once a time of cocoon felt protection and nestling concern;
a feel of warmth produced by the sharing of essence that has consumed
the fire;
the embers left are starved remnants of a care too long present;
Now sunlight beckons me while midnight screams its incandescent sounds as emptiness surrounds and I run grasping the neon brightness of beauty half-spent.
I offer a sixpence
for a moment—return it in the brilliance of tomorrow while superlatives demand now.

I waved at the black smiles, who shared popsi when Wyndell coun-us all.
He ran on to rap
cage for life.
Oh Christ, did I
But the smiles had
I am sorry Mrs.
the incense smolders and comes to me slowly in curls of musty fragrance;
 a gift once fit for a king
 now turns to ashes
   in my tarnished burner.

Christina Dedon

I waved at the black brows and tan smiles,
who shared popsicles and played ball, when Wyndell could run faster than us all.
He ran on to rape some cop's sister—prison for life.
Oh Christ, did I have fun with them;
But the smiles have faded into black, sweaty, sullen glares—
Not bothering nor wanting to notice me,
I am sorry Mrs. King.

Robert Alvarez
MODERN DELUSION

Valerie Stewart
“Last week, you said that you believed in the American Dream. Well sir, I am sorry to report that I do not believe in the American Dream simply because the American Dream does not believe in me as a black man. It has turned its back on me and told me that I am out of its reach, for if the American Dream did believe in me, you would not have your Newark, your Watts, or, for that matter, your Harlem. If the American Dream did believe in me, Martin Luther King would be leading the Poor People’s March on Washington. In essence, Mr. Vice-President, the American Dream for the black man is, in reality, nothing more than the American Nightmare. What I am saying, Mr. Vice-President, is that I have lost faith, and my people have lost faith, in the American Dream, and possibly America. My question to you, sir, is this: If you are elected President, what will you do to restore my faith and my people's faith in America and the American Dream?”
MONTAGE II

Jay Silverman

Under somewhat normal conditions
ice cream afternoons and Sundays in clover

She will beam an envious sun rivals her rays but are only mirrored contoured on her cheek.

She stands . . . rigid
She will cope with all games
There is never a need for involvement
Rules do not exist . . . she ignores them
Under somewhat normal conditions
Hopscotching the tattersal walkways or dressing in mohair and plaid

Her walls are solid words become rushes of air and only she chooses what to believe.

But, under somewhat normal conditions the end of a dream
the beginning of . . . well, a beginning

She will die
Salted tracks replace a thumbprint on her cheek soft . . . soft my child gossamer on chiffon

She will cry and I huddle
in the shadow of her tears afraid to watch frozen in the sun.
“NORTH WIND” (sandstone) by Nicholas Verina
Sing a song of civilization,
A pocketful of wry.
Four and twenty scapegoats,
Baked in a casuists' pie;
When the pie was opened,
The Church began to sing:
Wasn't that a dainty dish
To set before the king?

The queen was in the counthouse,
Counting the king's money;
The maid was in the bedroom (Shes was the king's honey);
All the rest were in the garden,
Washing the dirty clothes,
And stopping only long enough
To thumb their nose.

Jo Ann Stiffler
it was here—once—
i know, i can feel its presence.
a part of myself reaches—strives—st r e t c h e s—trying to grasp the elusiveness that once was—but is no more no matter . . .
it is gone now and won't return . . .
i cry fake tears
to show those (vultures!) gathering round that i really did care—and the dryness of them burns the flesh of my face—engraves twin memorials attesting to my cry,
"i cared, i really did care."
but no one hears . . .
how could they? i whisper
these things in my sleep—to the moth-wings that make up dreams as the warm sands trickle down towards dawn and tear the red curtain of my private night.

John Mallozzi
UNCOMMON

Patrick Greene

I stand apart from the commoner. They judge others, but not themselves. They retard wit and wisdom and art, and love, and beauty with apathy and ignorance and sodalistic gangrene.

I stand apart, although I'm not a tower of wisdom or strength. I am not cunning or beautiful. My mind is often ahead of or behind that of the mob cattle. I lust, sometimes, without love. No matter. I am I. I stand apart.

I stand apart, but once in awhile I see light break through darkness and illuminate a new brain which turns to thinking as an art seeks and owns his every thought. He is he, my friend, and he stands apart.
ALIGATOR MODULE WOOD

Harry Izenour
WEEDS IN STRAIGHT GARDENS

John Mallozzi

The crooked weed 'round the straight rose twists,
straining to feel the light caressing its dark and secret leaves lest they die from lack of favor; striving to show itself unshaded—but cautious—for the clouds move swiftly in this garden of straight flowers and all different species, no matter how true,
are quickly ripped and their roots laid bare.

With tender strength—su reticent instrument, for through all the ages of Life's throbbing pulse, the coordinated,
in the rhythm of Sappho's in the strings of David's springing from the bow at Alexander's wedding in the Luba beat,
in the mind of our deaf
and the soul of Shankar He guided her ascending an barely perceptible, from drifting, surging, sweating concentrated within an en his instrument.
In his magic hands she la
But they trembled, for the l beasts, and they challenge
With tender strength—supple fingers, steady lips—the musician gave life to his reticent instrument, forcing vibrations through her intricate network of passages, through all the ages of man: born together in some forgotten past, begotten of Life's throbbing pulse, they danced with perfect innocence, coordinated, in the rhythm of Sappho's songs, in the strings of David's harp, on the lips of Isis, springing from the bowels of Yang and Yin, in the flute's wailing before the pyre, at Alexander's wedding, in the Luba beat, in the mind of our deaf composer, and the soul of Shankar. He guided her ascending and descending scales, now moving rapidly now merging, barely perceptible, from note to amorphous note, in synchronized syncopation: drifting, surging, sweating through eons and kaleidoscopic moods, compressed, concentrated within an encompassing vacuum of liquid tension—the musician and his instrument.

In his magic hands she laughed and she cried. But they trembled, for the beauty of their music surpassed that of the birds and beasts, and they challenged even the gods.

Jo Ann Stifler
MONTAGE I . . . Il pleut dans ma chambre

(it's raining in my room)

Jay Silverman

I

Une place où il n'y pas murs

Failing to notice the screaming signal light
I run to the safety of the moonchild.

As usual . . . she waits dark kimono clad paper doll selling pleasure and assorted pains.

Lost in a swirling vortex of sandlewood
I pay my yen and enter into agony.

The pulsating origami cries moans
and exits with professional courtesy . . . bowing Charlie Chaplin adorned in silken finery.

II

Il pleut dans ma chambre

Rain . . . spattering . . . dripping . . . sloshing . . .
a glycerine protective veil guards the secrets of night.

And we, the watchers, wait in silence.
Rain . . . pelting . . . stinging dissolves the curtain.

Soon, ten thousand Mrs. Andersons will send ten thousand Johnnies and Sues out on to the street.

I DON'T WANT TO SEE
I CAN'T LOOK INTO THEM
the children kneeling beneath my window they sing their Hopscotching their way to they never tire . . . only ring around the ring around the

DON'T SING

YOUR GAIETY DAMNS ring around the ring around the

QUIT YOUR STUPID SONGS
DON'T YOU KNOW THEM

When will you learn that only exist for a short time Then . . . then your sweet die and forever gel
as the melted gum drop fl

MY CHILDREN
MY FRUITS

You cannot slide down re
I have never see
I DON'T WANT TO SEE THEM
I CAN'T LOOK INTO THEIR EYES

the children know all the stories beneath my window
they sing their afternoon trivia

Hopscotching their way to dusk they never tire . . . . only die ring around the rosie
ring around the rosie

DON'T SING
YOUR GAIETY DAMNS MY DEAFNESS

ring around the rosie
ring around the rosie

QUIT YOUR STUPID LITTLE GAMES
DON'T YOU KNOW THEY NEVER LAST?

When will you learn that gum drop flowers and licorice trees only exist for a short time . . . a very short time
Then . . . then your sweet youth will rot
die and forever gel
as the melted gum drop flowers.

MY CHILDREN
MY FRUITS

You cannot slide down rainbows
    I have never seen a rainbow.

continued
III

At the sign of the stained glass citadel
I suddenly feel a need funny . . . .
I haven't felt that for many years now.
Father . . . help me
go away
Father . . . please
go away
But Father you must must I? . . . will soft words be balm for your follies?
no . . . go away.

And Jesus . . .
staring at me from high atop his marble cross cries one two thousand year old tear as the stone crucifix falls smashed,
All that remains is a deaf crystalline ear . . . and I continue ever searching with Oedipal eyes searching for one place on' it n'y pas murs . . .
a place where there are no walls.

IV

All the while, the moonchild quietly waits.
She whispers her song like the mythodical sirens of Hell.
        come . . . . . come
There is no time for colored kites and mache' dragons and I enter into agony.
IT'S RAINING IN MY ROOM

Tim Gnauck
THE STRANGER

Jo Ann Stiffler

With the patience of Job
he sits upon a white porcelain dunghill, reading the kabala
engraved within the Motor Bar's belly.
 "There's no rest in the restroom," thinks this Hasid ( perhaps Buber's ghost)
as he deciphers the esoteric numbers on the wall.
 "Bang," says the door
as the bathroom brigade marches in,
and his heart leaps — takes the plunge of faith into our existentialists' abyss of nothingness—and hope begins to flood his soul,
 or his cock,
or something does;
and he wants to love
and be loved,
or something.
As the voices echo
muffled reverberating social grooming, he can understand
only the punctuations:
 "Wow . . . wow . . . like wow".
And the flower phonies leave.
Then an old man with thick glasses and a musty mustache stumbles in,
undesirable and available;
and the stranger knows that Easter is a dream.
BIRTHDAY POEM

Alex Gildzen

Unable to sleep
these past black hours,

I rise sweating to start another year tired and hurt.

I've found all the bright colors.

There's nothing left to celebrate but the night.
BROWN BODY

Susan Bystry

Brown body
long, slim —
my first.
Black hairs protecting a soft caressed groin.
Hands that touch,
probe,
hurt,
in gentle sweetness.
His smell assailing
my nostrils
as I gulp
for his manhood—Acceptance is momentary.

Light shatters
the self-imposed darkness and I see him, sculptured, Nigerian prince—
bend toward me.
JUNK MAIL

A reading by Jay Silverman

(The stage is pre-set, it is anywhere . . . the time is today, yesterday, tomorrow or never . . . The costuming is simple, the player is naked, open, vulnerable to the attacks of the audience . . . He stands beneath a bare spot and begins to read.)

X. August second, nineteen sixty-four.
My dearest, dearest son,

I saw you here last night. You wouldn't talk to me. You just stood there, grey eyed and sick. Your body shook and you sweated and vomited and were carried away in your own sea of body fluids. You screamed SH'MA . . . SH'MA . . . FOR CHRIST'S SAKE SH'MA . . . and you crashed through the window, glass piercing your throat and cancelling sound.

I called to you, but my voice only croaked and blood came to my lips . . . so I lost you in the damp sheets of morning.

The white carbolic whore comes in and puts towels on my head. She thinks I'm the Pasha of Peru or something. She runs her calloused hands over my body and my skin bubbles and turns to wax. She then proceeds to mold me into animal figures and leaves . . . The towels fall off my head onto the urine soaked rug and the Pasha of Peru digs into a hole . . . his magic carpet lifeless, not wanting to fly tonight . . .

Love, Dad.

continued

(Lights down for two minutes . . .
screeching. Lights up . . .

August tenth, nineteen sixty-four.
X. My dearest, dearest son,

The blue cold has frozen and bleeding lie dead at the whiteness of the stage and stuff thermometers in them, one at a time, adding still alive. They huddle in masks.

I try to spit . . . spit
A frozen mimic of death.

We had a party last night frozen in a puddle of hypothermalized and eyeballs solid, found fix.

The show began, less snow.

"Ladies and Gentlemen,
Let's give the little ladies a spit on them.

"Wonderful, Wonderful and applauding them.

We had a band. Seven and we all danced. "Char screamed and kicked and

"How about it folks?"

"More of them now," (more applause and his face swelled with

The night screamed with the musicians fell dead, cur
"ENCORE . . . ENCORE" called.

Refreshments were served passed trays of empty hypothernalices . . .

and we froze in the

DAD.
(Lights down for two minutes . . . a scream is heard . . . laughter, screeching. Lights up . . . the sound continues.)

August tenth, nineteen sixty-four.
X. My dearest, dearest son,

The blue cold has frozen my guts. My arms and legs, fostered and bleeding lie dead at my side. The mattress stinks . . . Blood sins the whiteness of the sheets . . . . They come in every hour and stuff thermometers in every hole in my body . . . Then they read them, one at a time, adding machines ticking, to make sure I’m still alive. They huddle in a corner and laugh behind their sterile masks.

I try to spit . . . swear . . . urinate, but I am crystalized. A frozen mimic of death.

We had a party last night. It was on the lawn. I stood naked, frozen in a puddle of hypodermic excrement, veins still, mind crystalized and eyeballs solid, staring into the night for a never to be found fix.

The show began. Lesbian dancers made angel figures in the snow.

“Ladies and Gentlemen,” the M.C. said, “isn’t that great?” Let’s give the little ladies a big hand.” We rushed on stage and spit on them.

“Wonderful, Wonderful,” and the dancers left the stage smiling and applauding themselves.

We had a band. Seven trumpet players played funeral music and we all danced. “Change partners,” I grabbed a girl. She screamed and kicked and we had sex in the snow.

“How about it folks?” (applause) “Let’s really hear it for them now.” (more applause) “Well, that’s about it folks . . . .” and his face swelled with blood as he fell dead to the ground.

The night screamed with the blast of trumpets and one by one the musicians fell dead, currents of blood spilling from their horns. “ENCORE . . . ENCORE . . . BRAVO,” a thousand junky voices called.

Refreshments were served as blind waiters in stained capes passed trays of empty hypos. Ten thousand burnt out veins sprang to life . . . wanting . . . ever wanting. It was a great affair, but eventually the music faded into the night . . . the snow turned to ice . . . and we froze in the shadow of the moon.

DAD.

continued
(lights down . . . a long pained scream is heard, groans . . . more screams . . . lights up . . . X is alone on the stage again . . . he is no longer reading . . . his voice is heard, but he is not reading . . . he can only react.)

X. My dearest son,

I'm coming home . . . . cleansed . . . . sterile . . . . empty of the poison that so long ran through my veins . . . . son . . . .

I'm coming home.

Love, Dad.

X. (he begins to moan, to scream . . . . he is no longer a man . . . he is no longer a reasoner of ideas . . . he can only react. He leaves the stage screaming . . . crying out curses . . . he stumbles and crawls to the exit door and falls . . . quiet . . . maybe dead . . . the curtain does not fall . . . the reading is over.)
CONTRIBUTORS

ROBERT ALVERAZ is a junior at Youngstown State University where he is a music major.

SUSAN BYSTRI is a sophomore at Trumball Branch, KSU where she is a sociology and psychology major and a theatre minor. Her poetry has appeared in PROBE, ICON, and PATTERNS.

CHRISTINE DEDON is an English major at Kent State University. Her poetry has appeared in ICON.

ALEX GILDZEN is co-editor of TOUCAN, at Kent State University. His poetry has appeared in AMERICAN WEAWE, CONGRESS, HIKA, NOUS, THE PENNY PAPERS, POLEMIC, SATIRE NEWSLETTER, and other publications.

TIM GUMCS is making his first appearance in print. He is an art major at Trumball Branch, KSU.

NANCY GNAT is a sophomore French major at Trumball Branch, KSU. She has appeared in the ICON.

PATRICK GREENE is currently a Green Beret in the Special Forces of The United States Army. Formerly he was a chemistry major at Temple University.

JOHN THOMAS HAND is an instructor of English at the East Liverpool Branch of KSU. Widely published, his poetry has appeared in MASSACHUSETTS QUARTERLY, CAROLINA QUARTERLY, and AMERICAN WEAWE, and ICON.

HARRY IZENOUR is an instructor in art at the Ashtabula Branch, KSU.

JOHN MALLOZZI is a sophomore art major at Trumball Branch, KSU. His poetry has appeared in PROBE.

GEORGANN MANUS is a sophomore art major at Trumball Branch, KSU. Her work has appeared in ICON.

VALERIE MARTITILA is a former student at Trumball Branch, KSU. Now a student in the Honors College, KSU, Miss Martitila was the founder of the ICON.

ROBERT T. PICKETT is Student Body Vice-President at Kent State University.

JAY SILVERMAN is a theatre major at Youngstown State University. His poetry has appeared in PROBE and PENGUIN REVIEW.

VALERIE STEWART is an art major at Trumball Branch, KSU.

continued
JO ANN STIFFLER is a student at Youngstown State University. Recently she has completed a novel.

DOREEN SWENSEN is a sophomore art education major at Trumbull Branch, KSU. Her work has previously appeared in ICON.

JERRY VANDEGRIFT is a sophomore at Trumbull Branch, KSU majoring in political science.

JAMES VAN GILDER is a freshman art major at Trumbull Branch, KSU.

NICHOLAS VERINA is a sophomore art major at Trumbull Branch, KSU.

CARL B. YOKE is Co-ordinator of Publications and Co-ordinator of English for Kent State University Branches.