This issue of the ICON is lovingly dedicated to Dr. Mary A. Brizzi
and to the miracle of creation - be it the creation of a new life or be it the creativity of the Arts that enriches that life.
ICON, the literary magazine of the Trumbull University, is sponsored by the English Department and the Art Department.

Faculty, students, former students of Kent State Campuses, and other universities are invited to submit essays, fiction, art work, or photography. We welcome anyone--student or nonstudent--in the Trumbull area.

ICON Advisor: Betsy Hoobler
Editors: Cindy Sase Sue Urbanek
Staff: Karen Anobile Donetta Beiland Gary Brienza Kathy Croft Susan Hanchin

Cover Design: Sue Urbanek

We extend our special thanks to Mrs. Thomas Halliday for her assistance.

by May Halliday
ICON, the literary magazine of the Trumbull Campus of Kent State University, is sponsored by the English Department in conjunction with the Art Department.

Faculty, students, former students of the Trumbull Campus, all Kent State Campuses, and other universities are invited to submit poetry, essays, fiction, art work, or photography. We welcome submissions from anyone—student or nonstudent—in the Trumbull County area.

ICON Advisor: Betsy Hoobler
Editors: Cindy Sase
Sue Urbanek

Staff: Karen Anobile
Donetta Beiland
Gary Brienza
Kathy Croft
Susan Hanchin
Karl Hummell
Eula Hyer
Lynda Lawrich
Terry Linville
Betsy Spangenberg

Cover Design: Sue Urbanek

We extend our special thanks to Mrs. Carol J. Perich for her typing assistance.
PRELUDE TO WINTER

Eula Hyer

Autumn paid an early visit
Just to kiss a tree or two;
And he blazed a trail to follow
With a gold and crimson hue.
He'll return in all his splendor
And the painting will be done;
Then the golds, the browns, and crimsons
Will hang dazzling in the sun.

Winter lurks—impatient—waiting
Jealous of sweet Autumn's glow;
Then one night when all is silent
He will blanket it with snow.
Floating flakes will add dimension,
In the moonlight how they'll shine;
Boughs will bend neath snowy burdens
On the juniper and pine.

Indian Summer swiftly passes,
Harbinger of winter's frays;
We must savor all the glory
Of the lovely Autumn days.
For when every leaf has fallen
And each branch is stark and bare,
We'll recall the radiant colors
And the taste of crisp fall air.

THE OTHER SIDE

The half-moon was ashine
looking like a strange lamp
yellow. It was an eerie sign

It makes one wonder what the other side of this glow pearl. Another world? Per I'd like to imagine a better world.

OCEANS OF HORSES

Oceans of horses ride in from the west
Creamy white horses ride out with a crest.
Shortly the wind will ship them back.
Whirl those white horses back and turn them
And left are no traces
In the wet sandy places
All of their hoof prints
They are all washed away.
THE OTHER SIDE
Cindy Sase

The half-moon was ashine tonight; looking like a strange lamp of yellow. It was an eerie sight.

It makes one wonder what is on the other side of this glowing pearl. Another world? Perhaps. I'd like to imagine a better world.

OCEANS OF HORSES
Pam Knock

Oceans of horses ride in from the bay
Creamy white horses ride out with the sea
Shortly the west wind will ship them and turn them
Whirl those white horses back out to the bay
And left are no traces
In the wet sandy places
All of their hoof prints
They are all washed away.
Sing, my brethren, sing unto all the earth
From the heavenly stars to the humble earth
For our Christ among us lives and reigns
His body for one life He gives in vain
Be glad and always His name pray
And give thanks for all your days

He came to us in such a humble place
Born in a manger and slept in a stall
He taught that to love we surely must
And He proved to be the Son of God
He healed and dried the tears of all
And loved us so that for us He gave His all

He rose from the dead as He had said
We try to live like the life He led
To love one another is the thing
So let our love together us bring
This is the way to end all strife
And make this world a better life

Do not let divisions make us part
Please let Jesus come into your heart
From the Fount of Life get your part
And pray every day with all your heart
Your relationships with others
For Jesus Christ is always your friend

by Bill Santell
A FRIEND FOREVER

Karen Anobile

Sing, my brethren, sing unto all the lands
From the heavenly stars to the desert sands
For our Christ among us lives
His body for one life He gives
Be glad and always His name praise
And give thanks for all your days

He came to us in such a humble way
Born in a manger and slept in a crib of hay
He taught that to love we surely can
And He proved to be the Son Of Man
He healed and dried the tears of those who cried
And loved us so that for us He died

He rose from the dead as He had said
We try to live like the life He led
To love one another is the thing
So let our love together us bring
This is the way to end all strife
And make this world a better life

Do not let divisions make us part
Please let Jesus come into your heart
From the Fount of Life get your fill
And pray every day with all your will
Your relationships with others you can mend
For Jesus Christ is always your friend
CANYON

Richard Hahn

Chrome and lacquer beasts roam aimlessly across the asphalt floor
Precipitous walls
echoing
echoing
echoing
their squealing footsteps
and bleating calls
as putrid breath
rises hazily in an aura
of fluorescence and neon

Beneath mortared chasms
tweed lizards
scrounge vainly
for a rodent
to prey upon
and sssuck its thirsty guts dry and leave it lying in the ageless dust

Iron cacti
erupt from cracked clay
and beckon the sky
which is quietly lured
over the rim
by Bill Mullane
THE OTHER SIDE OF THE ALTAR
Jeanne Bryner

When she walked down the aisle there were tears in her eyes, for this was to be the most wonderful day in her life. Look at her eyes six months from now, and the tears will still be there. However, this time she’s sobbing, walking out of a courtroom, walking away from one of the most traumatic experiences a person can have—she is walking away from her marriage. She’s walking away from a world she wasn’t prepared to handle. Marriage was a world filled with job-hunting, car payments, and finance charges. It was certainly not the world she had anticipated. The beautiful blushing bride has now become another harsh, cold statistic. Another marriage has gone down the pipe. Although marriages fail for many reasons, this marriage failed because the people were too young, they couldn’t cope with financial problems, and they were emotionally immature.

She was married soon after high school graduation. At eighteen, she was sure that she could handle marriage. However, it didn’t take long for her to find out that the world was too much for her. She remembered how excited she had been the day they had rented the beautiful apartment. And she smiled as she remembered the compliments from the gang at their first party: “Nice pad,” “Beautiful furniture,” were just a few of the comments. How sweet life was! At least it was sweet until the bills started rolling in; finance charges, why she didn’t even remember them being mentioned the day she purchased that beautiful stereo!

Enough of memories! She fumbled through her purse. There, she grasped the key tightly. The key to their apartment—funny how cold it felt. A chill ran through her as she headed out of the courthouse. She had to return that key to the landlord. The furniture had all been repossessed, along with the car, and when she gave the key back—well, that was all there was left to do.

How had the bills piled up so fast? She had been so sure that her job at the grocery store and his at the gas station would be enough. When they had finally decided to look for better jobs, they couldn’t find any. Oh sure, they could have been hired if they had had more education. But educations cost money, and that was their problem.

She remembered the fifteen-hundred dollars they had received at their wedding. That money was gone within a month. It had made a down payment on that lovely red sports car he wanted. And she purchased the velvet living room furniture with the balance. They had toyed with the idea of a checking account, but they decided it really wasn’t necessary. After all, they only had a few bills. And they didn’t give a second thought to a savings account. Why, those things were planning on retirement.

Suddenly in the car, his face flashed into her memory and so was she. Why was he yelling at her? Why was he yelling at her? The washer on purpose, and the repair man said it was. Why did he want it to be so? Was he being ruthless? All those angry words came out that evening, and she brushed the tears off her cheeks, and turned it all over.

As she turned off the ignition, she thought she decided to get a divorce. It had been a hot flash, but the idea was both exciting and sobering. They had yelled at each other for their situation. And finally, after the printout had talked. The only solution was divorce. Marriage hadn’t worked in five months—why should they keep trying? It was an intolerable situation.

Sitting there in the car, she suddenly remembered those bride magazines, a honeymoon in the Bahamas. Why didn’t somebody advertise finance on broken washers? Oh well, it was too late now.

She rang the doorbell: “Yes,” the apartment utilities were turned off, and “Yes,” the phone was on, it’s time to disconnect the phone.

She slowly slipped behind the wheel of the sports car. Tough day! She was moving back home to her parents ever, she decided to drive past the apartment.

She pulled into the apartment parking lot behind them at their front door. How she had giggled within the threshold! How could she have thought all those bittersweet memories of “happily ever after” for a long time. She started the car, drove out, and turned it off.

In her mother’s kitchen she glanced around. The room was circled. Next month she would be nineteen, she felt as though she was already thirty.

After dinner, she said goodnight, and watched as his back was putting her things in the closet, there was a doll house had fallen from the top shelf. Pieces: the tiny sofa, the miniature stereo, and... to a savings account. Why, those things were only for older people, who were planning on retirement.

Suddenly in the car, his face flashed into her mind. He was angry and so was she. Why was he yelling at her? After all, she hadn’t broken the washer on purpose, and the repair man had to be paid. She didn’t think his new “C.B.” was that important. After all, didn’t he want his clothes clean? All those angry words came rushing back. She quickly brushed the tears off her cheeks, and turned into the landlord’s driveway.

As she turned off the ignition, she thought about the day they had decided to get a divorce. It had been a hot, sticky, afternoon, and they were both angry. They had yelled at each other, each blaming the other for their situation. And finally, after the yelling, after the crying, they had talked. The only solution was divorce. They had decided if the marriage hadn’t worked in five months—well it just wouldn’t work. Why should they keep trying? It was an intolerable situation.

Sitting there in the car, she suddenly got angry at the world; all those bride magazines, a honeymoon in the Poconos, boy what a laugh! Why didn’t somebody advertise finance charges, bank accounts, and broken washers? Oh well, it was too late now.

She rang the doorbell: “Yes,” the apartment was clean, “Yes,” the utilities were turned off, and “Yes,” the phone man would be by this afternoon to disconnect the phone.

She slowly slipped behind the wheel. This was going to be one tough day! She was moving back home to live with her parents. However, she decided to drive past the apartment one last time.

She pulled into the apartment parking lot and she sat there looking at their front door. How she had giggled when he carried her across the threshold! How could she have thought all their days would be perfect? Those bittersweet memories of “happily ever after” were going to be with her for a long time. She started the car and headed for her parents’ house.

In her mother’s kitchen she glanced at the calendar; the sixteenth was circled. Next month she would be nineteen. Funny, but somehow she felt as though she was already thirty.

After dinner, she said goodnight and went to her room. When she was putting her things in the closet, there was suddenly a loud crash. Her doll house had fallen from the top shelf. She started picking up the pieces: the tiny sofa, the miniature stereo, and the broken washer.
Pallid fingers
pierce the chainlink
groping for outside

Diamond palms
and faces stare
into freshness

A rumbling pickup
sends screaming ha
scaling toward
crimson-tipped bar

Blue frustration arcs wildly
As electric bolts of fiery ton
Shatter stained glass to escad
And somewhere from the o
Cancerous rumbles born in\nCause walls to crumble in t

Charging winds of pain and Directing monstrous shadow Drown the obscure voices of
As salty rains fallen from d
Fill golden goblets with on
And a diamond sparkles at

by Holly Slanco
INSTITUTION

Richard Hahn

Pallid fingers
pierce the chainlink
groping for outside

Diamond palms
and faces stare
into freshness

A rumbling pickup
sends screaming hands
scaling toward
crimson-tipped barbs

EBONY REASONING

Sue Urbanek

Blue frustration arcs wildly onward
As electric bolts of fiery torment
Shatter stained glass to escape
And somewhere from the obsidian depths
Cancerous rumblings born to madness
Cause walls to crumble in their wake

Charging winds of pain and suffering
Directing monstrous shadows of sorrow
Drown the obscure voices of sanity
As salty rains fallen from disparity
Fill golden goblets with one last hope
And a diamond sparkles at the source
EXISTIR

Pajaro

Today I crossed that unknown valley
I faced the untouchable called reality
How destroying it can be
To see the child disappear
And the woman come out in me
My so-called friends seemed to Change faces
And all th things I knew
Were in the wrong places
I had the feeling of being blind
Looking for love, but could not find
My head spun with unwanted thoughts
Of times and seasons I had forgot.
I'm a child, girl, woman of nineteen
With most of the world I have not seen

Tonight I tried to decide who I am I know where I've been
And I know what I plan... but
That doesn't really tell me much
Of where I'm to go and see and touch
Life is quite funny, really so am I
To live my life and never cry
To look at a tree and not see the leaves
To walk in the wind, but not feel the breeze.

Tomorrow will probably be the same
Showered with confusion like a summer rain
What can I do? What can I say
To make this pain go away?
Climb a mountain, swim the sea?
Why does this have to be done by me?

Today I crossed that unknown valley
I faced the untouchable called reality
The fear has left my body now
And I don't seem to care somehow
If I wake in the morning and see the sun
How can I with what I've done?

My life started and ended today
I found myself but was lost the same way
Responsibility passed by me so fast
That I could not make it last... to Show the world what I can do
And make my dreams all come true

Be patient will you please
Let me smell the roses and see the trees
Someday I will do what you have done... and Wake in the morning... and see the sun.

THE GATHERING OF

THE GATHERING OF

This is my house and here is what I say,
Let a little dust gather where it may.
Oh sure, I could clean with ammonia and such,
But honestly, now, does it matter that much?

If I spent all my time
with a mop in my hand,
Who'd teach my son to build castles of sand?
And who'd show my daughter how soft flakes of white,
Can make up a snowman of rather large height?

For the days of childhood are too swiftly gone
But, the days of my house will live on and on...

Let others stand ready, with a dust cloth in hand,
Meeting those germs, with their favorite new brand.

So I'll clean just a little bit
Just what I must
And my children will know...
THE GATHERING OF DUST

Jeanne Bryner

This is my house and here's what I say,
Let a little dust gather where it may.
Oh sure, I could clean with ammonia and such,
But honestly, now, does it matter that much?

If I spent all my time with a mop in my hand,
Who'd teach my son to build castles of sand?
And who'd show my daughter how soft flakes of white,
Can make up a snowman of rather large height?

For the days of childhood are too swiftly gone
But, the days of my housework will live on and on....

Let others stand ready, with dust cloth in hand,
Meeting those germs, with their favorite new brand.

So I'll clean just a little bit, just what I must
And my children will know me; My house will know dust.
ON BEING A PARENT

Kathy Croft

I feel more and more boxed in all the time.
I don’t know where to turn anymore.
Every road I see is blocked to me.
I am confused, bewildered, and heart-sore.

My way and their way keeps stretching farther and farther apart. With no hope of meeting ... no common ground.
I am the Ogre, who lives on the hill, with scowling authority.
They are the innocents from the valley below.

I am confused, bewildered, and heart-sore.

I am a terrific thunder-storm ... that frightens and destroys.
They are the victims of my unreasoning anger.
I am the raging flood that whips away all that is good ...
They are the land-holders who watch all they have slaved for ...
wash away.

How do I reach them? Let them know that I am not all bad?
That I care, and feel, and love ... that I am not perfect ...
That I, too, sometimes need forgiveness. How do I explain
That I, too, make mistakes and feel regrets.

They look at me with such trust, but they expect too much of me.
I feel that I constantly fail them, so I resent their dependence.
My own fears and incapacities show and they know all my faults.
I am lessened in their eyes. I don’t have what it takes.

I have so much to teach them. So much I want to share.
They will not heed my lessons. How can they, when I fail?
Why should they listen to me ... I have made so many errors.
I am not the one to follow, I am not the one to guide them.

I want so much to reach out and touch one of them for just a moment.
To impart some word of wisdom that I have come by.
Not because I think I am so wise ... but I have learned a few things.
I could save them from just one of life’s hard lessons.

But, they see my failure and they close their ears and their minds.
I see I must let them make their own mistakes.
I must stand mute and blind while they founder with life.
I can only cry within my soul, silently, they cannot hear.

I do not wear my heart upon my sleeve, Determined, thus, to mask the tears.
No tearful, sad goodbye, nor 'till safe within the confines of a door.
A bitter torrent then begins to flow
Releasing all the anguish in my heart.
The pain I feel no friend of mine.
Nor will they say to me, " 'tis just for one day."
A Dream has vanished, like the cloud.
That disappear, as dawn breaks near.
And here am I, forsaken and alone -
Alone -- to face the future, for it is but a dream.

Another love, some day, to occupy me.
I must stand mute and blind while they founder with life.
I can only cry within my soul, silently, they cannot hear.
I do not wear my heart upon my sleeve
Determined, thus, to mask the rising gloom;
No tearful, sad goodbye, nor will I grieve
'Til safe within the confines of my room.
A bitter torrent then begins to flow
Releasing all the anguish in my breast;
The pain I feel no friend of mine shall know,
Nor will they say to me, "'twas for the best."
A Dream has vanished, like the mists of morn
That disappear, as dawn becomes the day;
And here am I, forsaken and forlorn,
Alone -- to face the future, find my way.
But if the fates are kind then there will be Another love, some day, to comfort me.
WALKING IN THE RAIN

Harold Holmes

Last night the sky was weeping
   As though it knew of my pain.
Lonesome and bored I left home
   Just walking in the rain.
I thought of the tender love
   That I will never regain;
It's stamped upon my memory
   And welded to my brain.
As I relived our love scenes
   Soon I did realize;
It was not raining now –
   Tear drops were coming from my eyes.
by Holly Slanco
GOD BLESS THE CHILD
Kandi Dunewood

god bless the child
who had a child tonight
please give her enough
mother wit to fight
instill within her the ambitious light
and to her child
i know it will be beautiful which do you want a boy or girl
either one but with plenty of curl
before he or she is born
there is work to be done
such as training the brain of everyone cleaning up the earth
so that we both can go out and have fun
together we can bask in the sun
by learning together we will have won
god bless the child
raise the child
so it won't run wild
feed it so it will grow
as straight as a daydream ruler and to be wise to your own precious prize
god bless the child
god bless the child
who had a child tonight
please give her enough
mother wit to fight
instill within her the ambitious light

ODE TO FAVORITE

There comes a time in every man
when he must be bold.
The inevitable must come forth
and this time has come for me.
I find that I can no longer resist
and so at last, I give up.
I will let my inner being shine
to say:
Hi there!

THE WOMAN'S PRO

sEXIST  IdentiTy

19
ODE TO FAVORITE PERSON
Phillip Dyer

There comes a time in every man's life
when he must be bold.
The inevitable must come forth;
and this time has come for me.

I find that I can no longer restrain myself;
and so at last, I give up.
I will let my inner being shine forth
to say:
Hi there!

THE WOMAN'S PROBLEM
Vivian Pemberton

sEXIST Identity.
A wonderment
   too vast to comprehend
And glistening
   on the hoary frost
Are stars
   from distant galaxies
The moon shines down
   on all that's sure to
A splendid silence
   broken by a sound
As one leaf,
   Falling to the ground
So trustless
   Through half-naked
One cycle is complete
   A new begins.

SEARCHING
J.

Dark fairies of a lightless night,
Are you sporting leathery wings?
What melody is this,
That calls upon my soul?
Could it be the wail of the sirens,
Should I let it go?
What kind of man is this, that would
As well as wife?
Pervert, prophet, sage and fool,
All of these
Or none?
O' those who speak of brotherly love,
Wherefore didst thing mercies go?
Persecute me not!
I be not devil, demon nor fiend,
Only questioning,
Seeking light.

by Bill Mullane
Eula Hyer

A wonderment
too vast to comprehend
And glistening
on the hoary, frosted grass
Are stars
from distant galaxies above
The moon shines down
on all that’s sure to last.
A splendid silence
broken by a sound
As one leaf,
Falling to the ground,
Softrustles
Through half-naked, empty limbs.
One cycle is complete
A new begins.

SEARCHING

John W. Rider

Dark fairies of a lightless night,
Are you sporting leathery wings?
What melody is this,
That calls upon my soul?
Could it be the wail of the sirens,
Should I let it go?
What kind of man is this, that would lie with man,
As well as wife?
Pervert, prophet, sage and fool,
All of these
Or none?
O’ those who speak of brotherly love,
Wherefore didst thing mercies go?
Persecute me not!
I be not devil, demon nor fiend,
Only questioning,
Seeking light.
THE PICTURE

Maureen M. Gregory

Nara picked up her paint brush and put the first stroke of fresh paint on the canvas.
The back door was unlocked. The strong black gloves softly turned the door handle. The door opened.
The painting had now blossomed into the strong figure of a man. His features were not out of the ordinary - tall, broad shoulders, and a grim, coarse face.
Nara did not hear the hushed steps as her brush swept passionately across the canvas.
He looked around and saw that she was wealthy. The huge copper pots overflowing with ferns, and the one wall covered with mirrors and other famous paintings done by Nara only enhanced his idea. He was now two rooms away.
Nara contemplated what colors to use for her man on canvas. Her idea of using abstract combinations of basic blacks made the picture absolutely fascinating.
His hands were black gloves. His clothes were solid black. His face was marked with black charcoal.
Nara’s picture was almost complete. The only thing she could not decide on was how to paint the eyes. How could she paint them?
He was watching her.
Nara still heard nothing. The last touch on the eyes -- finished. He gasped in astonishment.
Nara suddenly saw him. The man on the canvas was alive!
Nara had painted her killer.

He took one last look at his portrait -- the eyes on the canvas were crying.
by Bill Mullane
Hey sweet lady
I'm awful sorry but I've got some news.
You trust in men
And you've got to lose.
And please don't follow me down here into plastic euphoria
With the pills and boose.
And don't start hugging the clay feet
Of someone else's deities.
Have faith in yourself
That's all you need.

So here's to the one
Who's loved and lost,
And had to pay the piper's cost,
For daring to love one
Such as I,
Who stumbles around in his mistakes,
And who's labor of love
Lives in hate,
In the halls of hallowed matrimony.

Should you find a piece of me in this,
Then take it.
I put it here for you,
So that you would know
That in my heart,
For you,
My love,
Sings true.

I'd been crawling on the floor
just to see how things look on But times, they ain't changed much 'cause I've never felt as low as There's many a man still lyin' on and the road just goes on endless.
I hope some are bound to find the rest just take their remedies
and continue going nowhere.

All his warnings fall upon deaf ears
as the deaf are only leaders of the They follow in darkness when the
the deaf can't hear a faintly ple
When you take the World upon your
you have quite a load to shoulder.
Not realizing as you do,
keeps gettin' heavier as you go.
A great beam He must have carried

Carry away,
Bury your memories,
wipe away those tears.
They can only take your
why do you fear?
For it must occur,
within that time of year.

If you think of all who speak the seems only those with headstones.
Many of them have filled the earth
within our own three score and

If that's the way right must speak
then let us die in victory!
When righteousness has gone away
you'll be left with your own in
And you'll cast your eyes from the I’d been crawling on the floor
   just to see how things look on the ground.
But times, they ain’t changed much since then,
   ’cause I’ve never felt as low as I do now.

There’s many a man still lyin’ on that path.
   and the road just goes on endlessly.
I hope some are bound to find their legs;
   the rest just take their remedies,
   and continue going nowhere.

All his warnings fall upon deaf ears,
   as the deaf are only leaders of the blind.
They follow in darkness when they should not tread,
   the deaf can’t hear a faintly pleading cry.

When you take the World upon yourself,
   you have quite a load to shoulder.
Not realizing as you do,
   keeps gettin’ heavier as you grow older.
A great beam He must have carried.

   Carry away,
   Bury your memories,
       wipe away those tears.
   They can only take your body,
       why do you fear?
   For it must occur,
       within that time of years.

If you think of all who speak the truth,
   seems only those with headstones do not lie.
Many of them have filled the earth
   within our own three score and ten of time.

If thats the way right must speak out,
   then let us die in victory!
When righteousness has gone away,
   you’ll be left with your own imagery.
And you’ll cast your eyes from the mirror.
The thoughts we bear in our minds are not ideas created on our own.
Hearing echoes of words that were given us from others, since the day that we were born.

Beliefs we hold within ourselves
sound especially good from others’ lips.
And as our fractured ego feeds
on the fact that we’ve received no “quips,” we find the speaker to be solid.

Nations of pride.
Can you see just what your gold has done to you?
How much wisdom have you sought to fill your soul?
“Pride goes before destruction;
vanity before the fall.”

You know my body gets so weary just traveling up and down this worn out road.
Not being able to rest at all,
for fear very morals might erode.

Now I know the Worlds are on the march to sow havoc amongst their enemies.
They cannot see the others fault lie within their own entity.
they lose every battle.

The Wicked One fills us in our sleep with dreams, and visions of that time of years.
I guess he figures when we wake we’ll close our eyes and moths and gait in fear.

He doesn’t know that all our strength lies in the evil we perceive.
We can feel the sorrow crying out,
so we don’t have too much time to grieve.
Grief flows from contemplation.

So, the Day of Acclaim, is creeping up
just like a summer’s storm.
Just as you think you’re lying safe and warm.
But you can never say that you have not been warned.
CONTRIBUTORS

KAREN ANobile is a freshman majoring in journalism. This is her first appearance in the ICON.

Jeanne Bryner is making her debut in the ICON. She is a freshman in the Trumbull Memorial Hospital Nursing Program.

Charles Michael Croston is a sophomore geography major. This is his first appearance in the ICON.

Kandi Dunewood is a freshman majoring in mass communication at Ohio State University.

Phillip Dyer is making his debut in this issue of the ICON. He is a sophomore majoring in chemical engineering at Youngstown State University.

Richard Hahn is a music instructor in the Maplewood School System. He has published poems and haiku and was also awarded first prize in haiku category of International Poetry Competition sponsored by the Poet's Study Club of Indiana.

May Halliday is an art major residing in Warren. This is her second appearance in the ICON.

Harold A. Holmes is a retired steelworker; his material has appeared in previous ICONs and religious papers.

Eula Hyer is a sophomore working for an Associate of Arts degree in General Studies. She has had poems published in both the ICON and Western Reserve Democrat.

Pam Knock is a seventh grader attending Woodbridge Middle School. She enjoys playing softball and studying French, and is a member of the Girl Scouts.

Jim Malloc is a sophomore majoring in graphic design making his first appearance in the ICON.

Bill Mullane is an art education major making his debut in the ICON.

PaJaro is a freshman at KSUTC.

Vivian Pemberton is an assistant professor of English at KSUTC. She was the advisor to ICON for five years. She has had material published in the ICON, the Ohioana Quarterly, and Artful Thunder (a collection of essays).

John W. Rider is making his debut in the ICON. He is a freshman majoring in psychology.

Bill Santell is a freshman majoring in art. This is his first appearance in the ICON.

Cindy Sase is a sophomore majoring in English. This is her debut in the ICON. She is a member of SAB, SAC and is co-editor of the ICON.

Holly Slanco is an art education major residing in Warren. This marks her second appearance in the ICON.

Sue Urbanek is a junior majoring in zoology. She has had material published in previous ICONs.
HOW SUBMISSIONS ARE SELECTED

Works to be considered for publication are submitted to Mrs. Hoobler, ICON faculty advisor. She substitutes, in place of the submitter's name, a number; thus only she knows the identity of the individual authors. Each staff member is then given a xeroxed copy of each submission to be considered for the current issue. After final selections are made, the staff's copies are returned to Mrs. Hoobler and destroyed, thereby prohibiting the circulation of unauthorized copies of anyone's works. The final step in the selection of material is the staff selection meeting, when the ICON staff in its entirety meets to discuss and vote upon the final selections for publication. This choice is the sole decision of the student staff. Only after the final selections have been made does the advisor reveal the identity of those individuals whose works have been chosen.

No portion of the ICON may be reproduced without the consent of the individual contributors.